It would hardly be dealed that any upright, housest and intelligent man, who could survey the whole field of our necessities and our or it. List of lick, Wounded and Decessed Confidents tion, taking in at a glance all things connected with our policy of war, could frame a better exemption law than this Congress. We (Cangress) had demonstrated to the country, and to our own cander, that we could not frame a proper exemption bill at all, and hence the pur-pose of this bill was to place the matter in the hands of the Executive, who best combined the resources piccesary to a complete understanding of the subject. Upon every occasion when the exemption law had been brought before the House, every member, influenced by some little local pressure, had an assendment for it. There were the Dunksn's and Menonites in one quarter, that must be exempts; and there was another locality where millers were especially required; and so on, until a catalogue was made up, and a host of exempts instantly aprung into existence. Lanve the matter new to the judgment of the Executive, and if exemptions were necessary in special localities, then to the Executive the power belonged to meet the configuration, and the exemptions would be fair and just, and would prevent the growth of exemptions by false pretence. It was not likely that the President and member, qualified, took their seath.
